History of the Name

The name Southern Post is a nod to the old Southern Skillet restaurant and pays homage to the Southern Mills General Store, the first retail store serving the community surrounding the Mill. Architecturally, the site is designed to fit with the city's historic district. Local Firm, Linen & Flax, helped rebrand the old Southern Skillet Plaza as the new Southern Post - a gathering place for the community that offers modern amenities and celebrates the city's historical significance.

Downtown Roswell

Downtown Roswell is known as a "foodie destination" with an impressive array of dining experiences. The Chattahoochee River runs nearby, offering seven miles of wooded trails, and a Nature Center for kayaking, canoeing, zip-lining and eco-canopy walks. Downtown Roswell has an active arts community with a professional live theatre, artist markets, and seasonal events like The Azalea Festival, Roswell Roots: a festival of African American history and culture, Fun Runs and monthly "Alive in Roswell" evenings with live bands and food trucks that draw thousands of families into the city.
